These are the six required and two optional sections for the EE.

The body of your essay should be divided into subsections to make it easy for the reader to follow your argument. For most (but not necessarily all) subjects, you will use subheadings to make it clear where these subsections begin and end.

Paragraphs are the building blocks of your essay. Each paragraph should usually contain just one idea or new development. Paragraphs themselves should have a clear structure, and there should be clear links between adjacent paragraphs. There may be different numbers of paragraphs in each subsection.
